Rosehip Oil: It acts on the natural factor of hydration of the skin. This natural factor is a complex constituted by mineral salts, amino acids and urea, whose mission is to capture and regulate water in the skin. When Topical Rose oil is applied topically, it increases the activity of fibroblasts of the dermis, causing an increase in the production of collagen and elastin, providing firmness and elasticity. This occurs on the outer layer of the skin, but does not end here as the oil is absorbed into layers
